who have earned in the fullest sense a short respite from the worry, annoyances and heavy cares of business.

At Coxhaven Mr. Brandt was met by his brother, whom he had not seen for thirty long years, and a nephew whom he had not seen for a like period. It was a happy meeting, after inquiries one for the other had brought them face to face, neither knowing, or, in other words, remembering the favor of the other.

IN MEMORIAM .

Just twelve months, my dearest Earle, since God's Angels Came and took thee to that land so bright and fair—
Just twelve months—and yet it seems but yesterday we heard the capital footbles.

Since we heard thy gentle footstep on the stair.

Oh! how we miss thy sweet and loving prattle;
Thy dearest smile; thy loving fond

Oh! teach us, Lord, our grief and pain to battle.

For we know thou doeth all things for the best.

throne,
And our dearest Earle an angel, bright
and fair:
And, oh! the bliss—the pure delight—to

That some day we shall meet out darling there.

in His love, this grief to us is

God sent this grief to lead our thought

Oh! then, dear Earle, all tears shall pass

And sweetest songs shall take the place of sighs.

We shall live with our dearling for all eternity,
In that home beyond the skies.

Until then we bid thee now a last fare-

And leave thee to thy rest that God has

Until we meet thy spirit safe in Heaven.

four hours.

From London to Harwick a steamer carried Mr. Brandt across a part of the English channel and the North Sea to the "Hook of Holland."

Next came Rotterdam, where the hours sped swiftly by, go much of interest there is to be seen. But time waits for no man, so a train was finally taken for The Hague, in Holland, brought into new prominence recently by the action of the Czar of Russia in calling what is known as the Peace Conference.

Next to be visited was the great watering place, Scheveningen-in-the-Sea, and after its mysteries had been explored The Hague was again the objective point.

Amsterdam followed, and then Rotterdam, where, after summing up what had been the result of his seven weeks' trip in the way of sights seen and information gleaned, Mr. Brandt again took passage across the great Atlantic ocean, arriving home Wednesday, September 6th, where he was warmly welcomed by his hosts of friends, to whom he has been extremely interesting, telling of the many advantages of an European trip.
